There are many things that St. Androids have in common, but nothing so fundamental as their opinions. The students at St. Andrews develop and express, creatively and sometimes loudly, their individual opinions on every imaginable topic. The issues discussed among students about the St. Andrews community range from the success of Airband, to the estimated length of Jane and John Doe's new relationship, to the food at the cafeteria, or the Campus Police.

However, students' opinions are not limited to the campus. In relation to the larger world, students have opinions on the environment, domestic and foreign politics, or Princess Di and Prince Charles's divorce. No matter what the subject matter, everyone has his or her own opinion.

It is a trademark of St. Andrews that students not only have such opinions, but can articulately and concisely express and discuss them, giving them an edge in a complex world where sound bites and short attention spands reign supreme. The college is committed to fostering these opinions and not only listens to them when they are expressed, but pays attention to them.

Students are an integral part of making things happen on campus. Often, it is the students' opinion that fuels the fire. There is a wisdom at St . Andrews - the knowledge that not only are things a matter of opinion, but that opinions matter.

Non-traditional Students

There is a special strain of students that roams the halls of St . Andrews unnoticed. Many of them transfer in as juniors others start anew as freshmen. In many ways they endure the same ordeals and make the same adjustments as any other student. However, these students are special and are a very important addition to the student body. They are called non-traditional students. The term non-traditional refers to students who generally live off campus, are singgle or married, with or without children, and returning to school after a lengthy absence.

Why are they so special? Well, statistics show that non-traditional students do exceptionally well academically and are extremely dedicated students. This is for obvioius reasons. The most obvious being that they ar paying for their own education. Generally, these students are much older and have a variety of life 's experiences under their belt. They sometimes bring an extensive knowledge of their field of study with them. For example, Tara Laws has been working within the Southern Pines medical community for a number of years before choosing to return to college for her Bachelor of Science degree. Another, Dan Parsons, is a military retiree and on the road to a successful future in law.

Regina Harrington shifted from a career in environmetal engineering with the State of North Carolina's Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources in pursuit of one day becoming a Professor of Ethnic Studies.

Non-traditional students are not bombarded with the distractions of being away from the prying noses of parents for the first time. Many have been independent for a number of years. As a matter of fact, some are prying parents. Dan expresses the view of many, he states that he "would have wasted his time and money by going straight to college after graduating from high school in 1979." He was not ready for the discipline it would have taken at the time.

Along with all that life experience, these students often carry a heavier load of responsibilities. Many are head of households, fathers, mothers, and full-time employees -- sometimes all of these roles are combined. Imagine juggling all that and 15 to 19 credits every semester. They do not have the extra time needed to take advantage of study groups or special interest clubs. $\mathrm{Na}-$ tonja Jackson, a single parent, student and part-time employee, states that managing priorities is her biggest challenge. "You have to plan ahead and be very selective about how you utilize your absences. If my child were to become ill with something as minor as a cold, I could be out of school for days." Finding time to study is always a challenge. " J usually have to wait until they go to bed to study, so I don't get much sleep," one student, a mother of two, states.

College is not easy for anyone, traditional or non-traditional. This constantly growing minority of students, however, brings a lot to the St. Andrews community. No doubt, as the economic demands of our society encourage more to return for higher education, we will begin to see more non-traditional students from the surrounding counties.

International

 Diversity"St. Andrews is nice!" This was the general consensus among the many international students who attended St. Andrews. From St. Thomas to Ecuador, from the warmth of Columbia to the heat of Israel, students of different nationalities came upon the SAPC campus to discover adventure, fun, bien sur, and knowledge. "Como estan ustedes?" or "Shalom," were the common terms that echoed throughout the community of St. Andrews. Everyone learned something new, and made great new friends. Beth, Cat, and Jung-su could always be heard giggling in the hallways of Wilmington. Then there was Rex, who stated that his good friend Shin "always had a smile on his face!" The Ecuardorians tried to teach many students on campus how to dance. Even during a dark time in Israel, Danny managed to form a lasting frienship with Homey, as well as many others. At first, some of the international students had trouble adjusting to the new custons, and some of the ways that we have adopted, but their friends helped them overcome these problems. Many of the international students formed their strongest frienships with other internationals. Monika Tshiek and Maya Pottenkulam could be heard at all hors of the night in Wilmington Suite One laughing and acting silly. Steven and Beth Reeves discovered that they share an odd passion for Swahili music. Steven even tried to learn the choreography to "O Sifuni Mungu". Many of the international students were not impressed with the food at SAGA, but they found Mi Casita acceptable. Martin, from the former Czech Republic, made many friends within Model Un and Madrigals, where he is referred to as " Little Singer Boy". The international students made a wonderful impact on St . Andrews. They will truly be missed. Au revior, mon amie. Adios, mis amigos. Aufiederschien!!!!

After spending the fall term at St . Andrews, the Ecuadorians said their final good-bye to their friends.

TOOLS FOR THE FUTURE

Graduation for seniors happens throughout the year; fall, winter, and spring. No matter when the time comes they will all be filled with happiness and sadness all the same. It is their time to leave St. Andrews and move in a new direction, but what they have learned will follow them for the rest of their lives.

Katrina Brown plans to find a job in teh Equine industry and work in the area of management or perhaps teaching. St. Andrews has prepared her for the future by teaching hewe how to work with a diversity of people. The Equine Science and riding program has helped put Katrina on the road to success.
Colleen Cunningham plans to find a job in an environmental field, perhaps with a conservation or preservation organization. Colleen stated, "The best things St. Andrews has done for me was to teach me to accept all situations, viewpoints, and beliefs with an open mind and to seek knowledge before making judgments."

Jake Gardner plans to pursue a coaching/teaching position. St. Andrews has given Jake the opportunity to play baseball and to be an assistant coach. This has given him the experience he will need to reach his goals.

Patrick Mahoney is moving to Seattle, Washington and plans to pursue a job in the international field. St. Andrews had given him the chance to learn governmental history which will be needed if politics is the road he plans to take.

Rob Perron plans to pursue a basketball coaching career and possibly graduate school to earn his degree in sports administration. Rob's respons to St. Andrews preparation was "I learned how the unity of a small community can get BIG things done."

Meke Reese plans to get a job with a non-profit organization in the accounting or marketing field. Meke says. "St. Andrews has given me a well rounded education. The classes, professors, and students offer viewpoints which broadens your perspectives and prepares you for work in the "real world"."

Jacquelyn Sharp plans to get a job in marketing or communications. St. Andrews has prepared her with an overall good education. She also had a special thanks to Phil Barineau, who has been a huge help in formulating her future plans.

No matter where their future leads them, they all have one thing in common: St. Andrews and the frienships they have made. St. Andrews has given many seniors the tools for their future. Now it is up to each individual to use these tools and build their future. Graduation doesn't mark the ending, but the beginning of making a difference in the world.
